

Abstract

A plasma display is adaptive for improving brightness and discharge efficiency. In the plasma display, a pair of transparent electrodes is formed in opposing relation to each other and having a predetermined gap within a discharge cell. A metal electrode is connected to each transparent electrode in the pair. The gap is formed in a diagonal direction within the discharge cell.